Obama Traveling Press Secretary Jen Psaki Says “An Incomplete And A Desire To Do More Is Far Better Than A Failing Grade” On The Economy

During A Press Gaggle, Obama Campaign Traveling Press Secretary Jen Psaki Said Obama’s Grading Of Himself On The Economy As “Incomplete” And His “Desire To Do More Is Far Better Than A Failing Grade.” REPORTER: “But as a recipient of many ‘incompletes’ myself, I know that it’s not a passing grade. (Laughter.) So how do you make your pitch to the American public that an incomplete deserves a reelection?” JEN PSAKI: “Well, I think what an incomplete means is that there’s more work that he wants to do for the middle class and for the American people. The alternative is to go back to the old playbook of failed policies and failing grades, and that’s what Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan want to do. That’s where they want to lead this country. So you have a choice: Either you have somebody who has accomplished a great deal, who has helped bring the economy back from the brink of collapse and still wants to fight more for the middle class and do more for the American people, or you have the Romney/Ryan team that wants to go back to the failed, rotten policies of the past. So I think an incomplete and a desire to do more is far better than a failing grade.” (White House Press Gaggle, En Route Norfolk, VA., 9/4/12)
